

Contents

1	Who Can Know My Self? A New Look into Psychological Inquiries Into the Self	1
	We Construct Meaning to Live on: Facing the Future	2
	How Interaction Develops to Describe a Child: A Foundation of the Emerging Self	3
	A Need for a New Perspective for Looking at the Self in Interaction	5
	Meaning Construction and an Emergence of the Self in Natural Interaction	7
	What Works for Our Meaning Construction: Focusing on Two Aspects of Interaction	8
2	Self as Gestalt Quality	11
	Emergence of the Self and Gestalt Quality	11
	Presentation as a Mode of Symbolism	12
	The Complexity of Meaning Construction: Vygotsky's Perspective	14
	A Semiotic Approach for the Site of Meaning Construction	15
	Inquiries Into the Self on the Basis of a Semiotic Approach: How Meaning Construction Develops in the Dialectic Tensions in Life	17
3	Selves Emerging in Meaning Construction: An Analysis of Mother-Child Conversation from a Semiotic Perspective	19
	Perspectives on Child Development in Talk	20
	Personal Storytelling and the Development of Children's Selves	21
	Focus on the Conversation Concerning Everyday Transition in Children's Lives	22
	Data Collection and Preliminary Analysis	23
	Why Others? The Starting Point of Meaning Construction	24

Making Multiple Contrasts of Self and Others: The Role of Culturally Constructed Categories	26
Construction of the Presentational Self as a Development at the Microgenetic Level	28
How Signs Work in Conversation: A Description of the Dialectic Tension of Meaning	30
How Meaning Develops in Conversation: Sequence of Differentiation.	31
The Potential of Proper Nouns	33
How Concepts Work Together to Construct a Configuration: An Analysis of Yuuma's Stories	35
Enumeration Shifts to the Personal.	39
Conclusion	40
4 Rethinking the Frameworks of Psychology: What the Self Was and What it Was Not in Developmental Psychology	43
The Complex of Perspectives and Methods for Understanding Children's Selves	44
The Self is From Twofold Meaning Construction	45
Formalizing the Presentational Self: Three Perspectives	46
Modalities of Understanding Children's Selves	49
Comparing Understandings of Children's Selves	54
Conclusion: An All-Inclusive Perspective for Children's Selves	55
5 Construction of Selves Through Written Stories	57
Children's Writings About Their Experiences in Japanese School Education	58
The Historical Background of Children's Writings About Their Experiences	60
Children's Writings and Our Understanding of Children's Selves	62
Approaching Children's Personal Stories in Nikki	63
A Fundamental Process of Meaning Construction in Nikki Writing: Describing Events in Time	64
The Self in the Construction of Ordered Configurations of Events	66
Absence of the Substantial Dialogical Partnership in Writing	68
Construction of Relationships with Readers.	70
Different Types of Otherness in the Process of Writing	71
The Development of Meaning Construction beyond Enumeration	72
The Extension of Meaning Construction into the Details of Experiences.	74
Introducing Dialogue into the Field of Meaning Construction.	76
Otherness as the Promoter of Meaning Construction	78
Conclusion: The Presentational Self from Multiple Dialogues in Writings.	78

6 Reunion with Others: Foundations of the Presentational Self in Daily Lives	81
Why Do Children (and We) Occasionally Go Into and Develop Meaning Construction?	82
The Potential of Mundane Settings for Meaning Construction	83
Reunions in Our Lives Show a Two-Sided Nature: An Inevitable Consequence of Modern Life and a Commodity to Be Consumed	84
The Foundation of Reunion: Two Dialectic Tensions.	86
Reunion, Prediction, and Psychology	87
The Role of Dialogical Meaning Construction in Reunion	88
Reunion in Music: An Analogical Discussion on the Regulation of Reunion.	89
Suggestions from the Trials of Music History: A Focus on the Openness of Reality	90
Conclusion and Further Questions: Our Lives (and Our Research) Do Not Proceed like a Beautiful Music	93
7 The Visibility of the Invisible: What Propels Meaning Construction in Our Lives	95
Invisibility by Substantial Obstacles: A Simple Pattern of Impediment.	96
Invisibility Due to Physical Impediments and Meaning Construction	96
Visibility by the Semiotic Extension of the World: An Extension from Physical Invisibility	98
Another Form of Invisibility for Promoting Children's Meaning Construction	98
The Complex of Two Types of Invisibility and Meaning Construction	99
The Visibility of the Invisible Other: Struggles in History	100
Regulation of Visibility for Construction of the Self	101
Conclusion: Ambivalence of Visibility	102
8 The Dialectic Dynamics of Same <> Non-Same and Human Development	105
The Dialectic Tension Concerning Sameness as Ubiquitous Dynamics	106
Focus on the Repetition and Its Amplitude.	107
Our mind Emerges and Develops in the Similarity of Behaviors	108
Conclusion: Spring Up in Repetition, Happen to Be Self	109

9 The Presentational Self and Meaning Construction
in Our Lives	111
A Relational View on the Self in Meaning Construction	112
Dialogical Process in Meaning Construction and the Emergence of the Self	113
Dynamics of Daily Lives that Enable Meaning Construction	113
The Indivisibility of Relationship, Meaning Construction, and the Self	114
Commentary 1 An Original Contribution With Great Potential.	117
Commentary 2 Children Emerging Laughingly Through Dialogue	129
References	137
Index.	143